The UAE also ranks among the world's most generous countries, donating the equivalent of 1.22% of its gross national income to foreign aid, easily surpassing the international target of 0.7% from 2013 to 2018.

CUTTING-EDGE PUBLIC INFRASTRUCTURE

Dubai has invested more than US$27 billion over the last decade creating the world's most advanced transportation infrastructure, which literally keeps the city moving.

In addition to the seemingly endless multi-lane motorways that crisscross the city, Dubai is home to one of the world's longest driverless metro networks, as well as modern and affordable ferry, bus and tram services.

According to the World Economic Forum, Dubai boasts the world's best-quality roads, while in its Hub Report, Knight Frank says the city houses the third-best transport infrastructure of any city in the world.

Never one to rest on its laurels, Dubai is also pioneering the future of autonomous and electric transportation.

Under the Dubai Autonomous Transportation Strategy (DATS), the city aims to convert a quarter of its transportation to autonomous mode by 2030, a move authorities say will improve productivity by 13%, reduce transportation costs by 44% and generate US$4.9 billion in annual economic returns.

GRAND AMBITIONS FOR THE FUTURE

In a city renowned for its relentless ambition, the next 20 years presents a watershed period in Dubai's development.

The recently launched 2040 Urban Master Plan, which provides a detailed roadmap for Dubai's growth over the next two decades, foresees a lush, green city oasis that is home to 5.8 million people – up from 3.3 million today – and is a world-leader in sustainable development.

Under the plan, parkland and recreational spaces will account for 60% of Dubai's total area by 2040, more than double the allocated space today.

Green corridors will be established linking the main urban areas, providing sustainable transit routes for the city's residents with the addition of bike lanes and mass transit services.

The plan also accounts for the growth of Dubai's tourism and hospitality sectors, which are key pillars of its economic diversification strategy.

By 2040, the total space dedicated to hotels and tourism activities will increase by 134% compared with today, while the area dedicated to commercial activities will increase to 168 square kilometres.

The Master Plan will help Dubai further consolidate its reputation as one of the world's most liveable cities and most popular tourism and business hubs.
